Four-day European Management Symposium, incl. Herman Kahn, John Kenneth Galbraith, Klaus and Hilde Schwab, ended. The Observer (London). Reproduced for educational purposes only. Fair Use relied upon. Source: https://www.newspapers.com/image/257835706
THE OBSERVER. 7 FEBRUARY 1971

THE LONG and short of it in the world of economics. Herman Kahn (on the left) is the short of it, but has the splendid title of futurologist, which means he's used to thinking in the long-term, whereas John Kenneth Galbraith (on the right) stands 6 feet 8 inches tall, but has recently developed a passion, for de-growth. Here they are pictured, probably discussing the role of the middleman, during an interval in the first European Management Symposium, which was held at Davos in Switzerland and ended this weekend.