[Note: This article totally fails to even mention Luce III's long Pilgrims Society leadership stint. See appended Pilgrims Society official book.]

Henry Luce III, the son of a founder of Time magazine who joined the newsweekly as a Washington correspondent in 1951, rose to publisher in 1969 and held other prominent positions in Time Inc.'s empire, has died. He was 80.

Luce died Wednesday of undetermined causes at his summer home on Fishers Island, N.Y., said Terry Lutz, vice president of the Henry Luce Foundation, which Luce ran from 1958 to 2002.

During his 45-year media career, Luce also served as Time magazine's London bureau chief in the mid-1960s and as publisher of Fortune magazine. He was a longtime board member of Time Inc. and later Time Warner.

Time magazine was the brainchild of his father, Henry R. Luce, and a Yale classmate, Briton Hadden. The pair decided the American public was poorly informed about public events and raised $86,000 to launch the magazine in 1923.

The younger Luce, known as "Hank," was born April 28, 1925, in New York City. Six weeks after his parents divorced in 1935, his father married Clare Booth Brokaw, a widow and playwright who became a legislator, ambassador and war correspondent for Life, one of her husband's magazines.

After serving in World War II as a naval officer on a destroyer in the Pacific, Henry Luce III graduated from Yale University in 1945. His first postwar job was as an assistant to Joseph P. Kennedy, patriarch of the political family and then a member of the first Hoover Commission.

Luce became a newspaper reporter at the Cleveland Press in 1949 before joining the family business two years later. At Time, he wrote cover stories about Wisconsin Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and Vice President Richard M. Nixon, and spent two years as a foreign news and national affairs writer.

He oversaw the construction of the new Time & Life building at New York's Rockefeller Center, then held a number of positions on the business side at Time Inc.

Founding the Time-Life Music division brought him satisfaction.

"I brought the company into the music record business," he told the Philippine Daily Inquirer in 2000.

By then, Luce was 75. He attributed his longevity to keeping busy, including his travels for the Henry Luce Foundation. With assets of more than $1 billion, the foundation supports programs in higher education, Asian affairs, theology, women in science, engineering and the environment.

The foundation's interest in Asia and theology can be traced to Luce's grandparents, who were Presbyterian missionaries to China. His father was born in China and lived there until he was 14.

A $7.5-million gift from Luce to the New-York Historical Society in 2000 transformed a long-unused gallery into the Henry Luce III Center for the Study of American Culture. The showcase of 40,000 artifacts includes a large collection of Tiffany lamps and a 19th century cockroach trap.

By 2001, Luce decided that collecting paintings of prominent 20th century and contemporary artists was "no longer affordable," he told United Press International, so he started collecting cast-iron wheeled toys.

Earlier this year, Luce and his wife, Leila Elliott Burton Hadley, celebrated their 80th birthdays at a party they threw at New York's 21 Club. At the event, Luce recited a poem that made clear his affection and respect for his wife of 15 years.

Luce's first marriage, to Patricia Potter, the mother of his two children, ended in 1954. His second wife died in 1971, and his third wife died in 1987.

In addition to his wife, Luce is survived by a daughter, Lila Frances of Kenya; a son, Henry Christopher of New York; and his only sibling, Peter Paul Luce, of Boulder, Colo.

Introduction

The Pilgrims is a society dedicated to the cultivation of and adherence to the special relationship between Americans, the British, and peoples of other English-speaking countries. We are proud that the Pilgrims of the United States, the counterpart of the Pilgrims of Great Britain, are this year celebrating their Centennial. This book is presented to commemorate that event.

With it we must honor the memory of Hugh Bullock, Knight Grand Cross of the British Empire, who was the seventh president of the Pilgrims of the U.S. and who served for forty-one years from 1955 to 1996, when he died at the age of ninety-eight. A banker, as well as a soldier, Hugh Bullock had a passion for sailing—and unusually for a sailor, he stood ramrod erect.

It is hard to believe that Hugh Bullock's immediate predecessor was John William Davis, the man who was Democratic nominee for president in 1924 and also ambassador to the Court of St. James's. Before that, the president of the Pilgrims of the U.S. was the renowned seer Nicholas Murray Butler. He was preceded by the fourth president, Chauncey Mitchell Depew, railroad tycoon, orator, politician, and senator. The three earlier presidents served less than five years each.

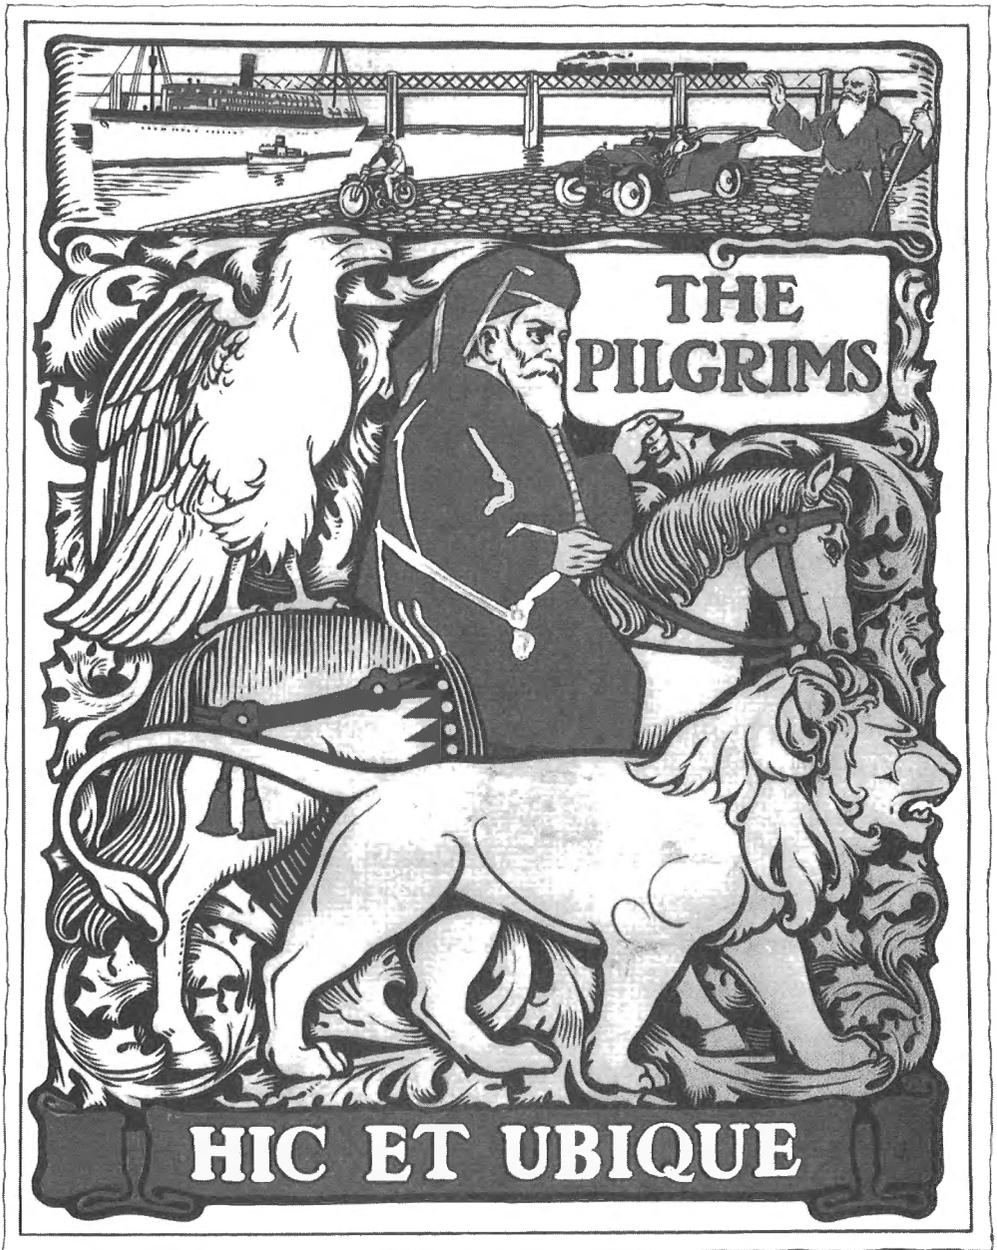

We are indebted to Anne Pimlott Baker for her splendid authorship of this biography. An historian and writer, she is also the author of The Pilgrims of Great Britain—A Centennial History, and is a research associate of the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography.

Allow me to enthusiastically adopt the words of our fellow Pilgrim, Caspar Weinberger, former U.S. Defense Secretary: "The English-speaking people are those who have demonstrated time and again that they are the ones most determined to keep peace and freedom secure for our friends and for ourselves." As Pilgrims we treasure these values and cherish the fellowships that unite us.

The Pilgrims emblem. This was designed in 1902 by Hugh Fisher of the Illustrated London News following Lindsay Russell's ideas, and approved by Rider Haggard, author of King Solomon's Mines. Above the head of the medieval pilgrim is a scroll showing another ancient pilgrim gazing with amazement at a motor car, steamship, bicycle, and train. The British lion is in front, with the American eagle on the back of the horse. Some subtle changes crept in during the early years, including the design of the motor car.

A HISTORY OF THE PILGRIMS

A FEW MONTHS AFTER the inaugural banquet of the Pilgrims on August 8, 1902, at the Carlton Hotel in London, on the evening before the coronation of King Edward VII, an organizing committee met at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York to launch the Pilgrims of New York. The idea came from a group of Americans working in London; unlike similar American institutions in London, such as the American Society, whose membership was exclusively American, the intention of the Pilgrims from the start was to form a truly Anglo-American society. The idea grew out of a conversation held in the smoking room of the Carlton Hotel between Lindsay Russell, a member of the New York Bar, in London to open the London office of his law firm, Alexander and Colby, George Wilson, a vice-president of the New York Life Insurance Co., and William Goode, special correspondent of the Associated Press of America, about the inadequacy of the American Society in London for bringing Americans and Englishmen together,¹ and a similar inadequacy on the part of English societies, such as the St. George's Society, in America. London was full of American journalists at the beginning of July, there for the coronation, planned for June 26, which had had to be postponed at the last minute because of the King's operation for appendicitis, and Lindsay Russell wrote to many of them, and to various prominent Englishmen women would help to revive numbers and inject new energy into the Society. As far as the English-Speaking Union was concerned, he had always felt very strongly that the Pilgrims were different than the E.S.U.,¹³¹ and he was worried that if the Pilgrims were to meet on E.S.U. premises they would take second place to it and might even lose their separate identity altogether. After more informal discussions, Hugh Bullock appeared to be in agreement about the proposals, but in May he went off to Martha's Vineyard for the summer, and the matter seems to have been shelved. It was not clear whether John Train was intended to be Hugh Bullock's successor as president—the title of "president-designate" was suggested at one point—or as a chief executive officer to run the Pilgrims until Hugh Bullock retired, nor was it determined whether he should start at once or at some point in the future. During the summer, Bullock changed his mind and decided he wanted to retire completely, and at a meeting of the executive committee on October 28, 1996, he was given the title of President Emeritus, Henry Luce III was elected acting president, and a search committee was appointed to find a new president. Hugh Bullock died the following week, on November 5, 1996, at the age of ninety-eight.

At a meeting of the executive committee on February 26, 1997, Henry Luce was elected president. Even before his election, the Pilgrims had begun to take on a new lease of life with the election of five new committee members in December 1996, including Ann Brownell Sloane, the first woman to be so elected. At this meeting, the committee also decided to change the wording of the rules of the Pilgrims of the

Ann Brownell Sloane

United States, a change first suggested by John Train. The object of the Society henceforth was to be the cultivation of good fellowship between "peoples of the United States of America" and "the British Commonwealth of Nations," rather than "citizens" of the United States and "subjects" of the British Empire. One pressing issue was the need to move the Pilgrims' office, which had been in Hugh Bullock's office at 1 Wall Street (though with the official address of 80 Broadway) since 1984. Two ideas were discussed: The English-Speaking Union had offered space in its New York premises, and it was also suggested that the Pilgrims might share an office—and a secretary—with the St. Nicholas Society of the City of New York. In deference to the late Hugh Bullock's strong feelings about the E.S.U., the Pilgrims decided to move to 122 East 58th Street, home of the St. Nicholas Society. Henry Luce had also visited London at the beginning of 1997 to meet Robert Worcester, chairman of the Pilgrims of Great Britain, and had had several discussions with him and other British Pilgrims about the future direction of both societies. As the Pilgrims launched a program of events, beginning with a reception on June 23, 1997, for Robert Worcester, applications for membership (many from younger people)¹³² increased, encouraged by the admissions committee chaired by Mark Dixon. Membership reached a peak of 914 in 2000, and there was a large turnout of 290 for the Australian ambassador, Andrew Sharp Peacock, on November 18, 1997, and an even larger attendance for Prince Philip on March 19, 1998, with 356 present, and a waiting list of fifty-one. As at every stage of the Pilgrims' history, it was difficult to get the speakers they wanted: For example, Tony Blair, the British Prime Minister, refused several times. Although Bishop Moore suggested that on some occasions, as an alternative to having a speaker, there could be a debate or discussion group, and that this might particularly interest younger members, the committee decided that most members would prefer to continue to have a "name" speaker, but they agreed to widen the scope of speakers to include American diplomats.¹³³ To help with the task of inviting speakers, a speakers committee was formed in 2001. Another innovation was the setting up of the Pilgrims Foundation in 2002, incorporating the William Donovan Foundation, with the intention of sponsoring an annual William Donovan Lecture.

As it entered its Centennial Year, the Pilgrims of the United States was in good health, and, while intent on maintaining its original purpose, the cultivation of good fellowship at a personal level,¹³⁴ the Society also had a more carefully delineated approach to the future, as indicated by the new mission statement, adopted in 2002:

Founded in 1903, the Pilgrims of the United States, an association of men and women, in alliance with the Pilgrims of Great Britain, seeks to foster fellowship between Americans, the British and other English-speaking peoples. In addressing current national and international issues, it emphasizes enduring historic, cultural, economic, and social bonds.

The announcement of the dinner for Edward, Prince of Wales (later King Edward VIII, and then Duke of Windsor), on November 21, 1919, the last night of the Prince's visit to New York. Although there had been some doubt as to whether the Prince should extend his North American tour to New York for fear of a hostile reception from the Irish, he wanted to go ahead, and he was given an enthusiastic welcome.

Dear Hugh:

Again I want to tell you how much I enjoyed The Pilgrims dinner last evening. I was -- and am -- deeply appreciative of the honor you conveyed upon me, and I shall lastingly cherish the gold medal presented to me as a tribute to the close relationship that exists, and will I-trust always exist, between all the English speaking peoples.

It was a great pleasure and rare privilege to be able to renew so many old friendships. I am indebted to you personally for all you did to make the dinner such a gala affair. I hope, too, that you will tell Mr. Converse of my gratitude for his friendly helpfulness.

With many thanks and wa'rm personal regard,

Dear Hugh:

I am very grateful to you for your kind invitation to serve as Honorary President of The Pilgrims of the United States. It was thoughtful of you to send me the pamphlet describing The Pilgrims' activities with your letter and I want you to know that I will be glad to accept your invitation.

As you know, I was delighted to have the opportunity to address The Pilgrims of the United States during my term of office as Vice President some years ago, and I greatly appreciate the privilege of serving as Honorary President of this distinguished organization.

With my thanks for your generous remarks and with warm regards,

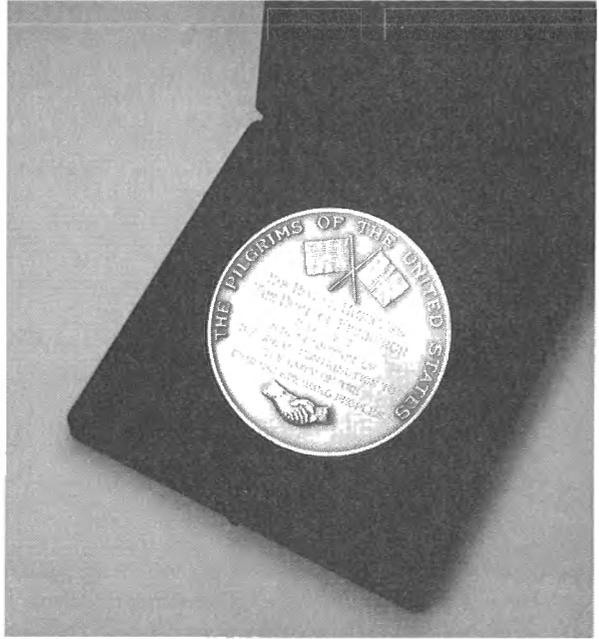

Sincerely,

A letter from President Richard Nixon, accepting the invitation to become honorary president of the Pilgrims of the United States. In 1953 President Eisenhower was the first American President to be so invited, and the tradition continued into the 1980s. President Reagan was the last honorary president of the Pilgrims, but the President of the United States continues to be elected an honorary member. There is no reference in the Pilgrims archives to Nixon having addressed the New York society during his term of office as vice-president, but he did speak to the Pilgrims of Great Britain in 1958.

Thank you for your good letter of July 19.

While I am honored by your invitation to accept the Honorary Presidency of the Pilgrims of the United States, I hope you will understand my decision not to accept honorary memberships or offices in organizations in which I cannot actively participate.

I am most grateful for your thoughtfulness and send you my best wishes.

A letter from President Jimmy Carter, refusing the invitation to become honorary president of the Pilgrims of the United States. It was understood that he refused because he did not want to join a society that did not have any black or women members. In October 1978 he declined for a second time, despite the efforts of the Pilgrims, who urged him not to break a "long-standing tradition" (a tradition that went back only to 1953, when President Eisenhower was elected honorary life president). President Reagan was the last U.S. President to become an honorary president; the tradition lapsed after this.
