1917	May 17		Russian Czar Nicholas II abdicated. Remarkably, the British War Cabinet, including Lord Milner and Bonar Law, were providing carefully couched impressions as facts (e.g., the Russian people were revolting because the Czar was not prosecuting the war against Germany with enough efficiency!) to the American public, whose major newspapers, in lock step, repeated Bonar's speculations as facts immediately; information that they could not possibly have known unless they had written about the abdication for the newspapers before it happened.
