Book of Roads and Kingdoms (Ibn Khordadbeh)

The Book of Roads and Kingdoms (Arabic: كِتَابُ الْمَسَالِكِ وَالْمَمَالِكِ, romanized: Kitāb al-Masālik wa-l-Mamālik) is a 9th-century geography text written by the Persian geographer Ibn Khordadbeh. It maps and describes the major trade routes of the time within the Muslim world, and discusses distant trading regions such as Japan, Korea, and China.^[1] It was written around 870 CE, during the reign of Al-Mu'tamid of the Abbasid Caliphate, while its author was Director of Posts and Police for the Abbasid province of Jibal in modern-day Iran.

The work uses much of the Persian administrative terms, gives considerable attention to pre-Islamic Iranian history, and uses the "native Iranian cosmological division system of the world". These all show "the existence of Iranian sources at the core of the work".^[2]

The book is also referred to in English as The Book of Roads and Provinces.
